www.MinotDailyNews.com HODD&HOME Wednesday, February 11, 2015 • Section C

Lifestyles: Jill Hambek 857-1938 or 1-800-735-3229; e-mail jhambek@minotdailynews.com

A beef with boiling

Dear Heloise: Regarding the hint from C.V. in St. Louis (Heloise here: C.V.'s hint in a previous column was to boil ground beef before using): By boiling the beef and draining it, the food value — soluble vita-mins and minerals, especially B vitamins — is lost. Browning actually enhances the flavor of beef.

My hint: Drain the cooked beef into a bowl, refrigerate until the fat is solid and then separate the fat from the broth (which will be on the bottom) and add the broth back to the beef. This retains both food value and flavor. - Riva C., via email

Riva, thanks for reminding us (me included) of this tried-and-tested food hint. There may be a small loss of nutrients into the water, so it's a tossup! Eliminate the fat if you are watching your calorie intake, or expect some nutrient loss. Use the least amount of water that you can, and slow-cook rather than boil at high heat to keep the most vitamins. – Heloise

No drippy mess

Dear Heloise: Our family loves to entertain and does so regularly. Here is one of my favorite entertaining hints: I keep several plastic squeeze bottles filled with condiments. Mustard, mayonnaise, ketchup and salsa can be kept neatly in these bottles. No worries about multiple knives and spoons in condiment jars contaminating them. — Mariah D. in New Jersey

At the Badlands Grill, the ambience is comfortable and relaxed, inviting guests to take their time and enjoy their meals.

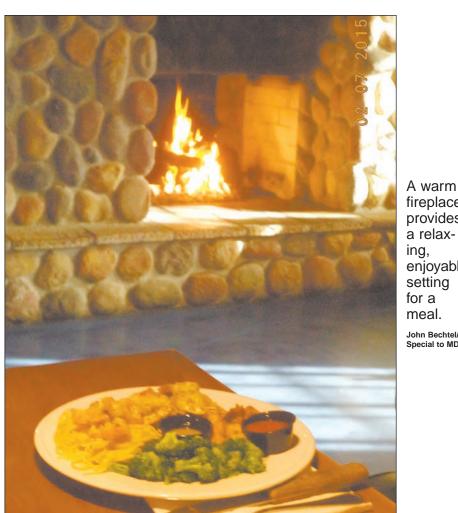

Badlands Restaurant and Grill: a case study

By JOHN BECHTEL Freelance writer jbechtel

@thenewvoltaire.com

This agreeable restaurant located at 1400 31st Ave. SW can be a little hard to find if you haven't already been a guest there.

If you are relatively new to town, it helps to know that in Minot, streets run north and south (the air force base to the north, Bismarck to the south); and the avenues run east and west. Main Street is the north/south axis (although I think it would make more sense for Broadway to serve this purpose — you could live in Minot for a year without ever knowing where Main Street is), and Central Avenue is the east-west axis. The restaurant is on the back side of the mall, near the main entrance to Sears. Badlands has a big sign and a huge parking lot, and it is handicapped accessible. The atmosphere is casual, and its best feature in my opinion is the lovely fireplace halfway back to the kitchen. Overall, the restau- wines is modestly priced to rant has a cross-over appeal begin with. For example, to a boy and girl, and owns a may have noticed our ongosomewhere between rustic you can purchase any Stone local ranch. He graduated ing use of the word "guest," and bistro: lots of wood. Cellar brand for $8.50 for a from Bismarck State College because that is what the hossaloon-style light fixtures, bottle on Mondays. Not bad. with a degree in hotel and pitality industry (hotels and and to the left, just inside the A Long Island Iced Tea will restaurant front door, is this huge flat only set you back $6.99 (four About a decade ago, what For example, when a guest boulder with seating room shots). for at least eight guests. Ask them how they got it in may want to know: There is unlikely name Up the Creek shown that 68 to 70 percent there. dining areas, each with a ity for up to 40. There is no Atlanta. Allen opened that have had with just one slightly different ambience. charge for the room as long restaurant, which didn't sur- employee of the establish-First impressions are favor- as you are eating there. vive, he then left to manage ment, whether it be the able, but after that it almost Allen Lovro, the general Tower Travel Center, a truck host(ess), the server, bar tenseems as if you never left manager, suggests you stop halfway between der or other staffer. It is not home, and it's no longer reserve the room at least a Jamestown and Fargo for enough to have a great menu about the restaurant, but the day ahead of time to be on four years, and came back to and a good cook. That's just conversation at the table. the safe side; it is first-come, re-open this restaurant where it all starts. And that is as it should be. first-served. Allen also rec- under The food is casual to comfort ommends reservations for Badlands, and new owner- than a restaurant owner; it food and the prices are mid- any group of 15 or more, ship. But more about that in applies to a professional manlevel for casual dining in the whether you need the room a minute. Minot area. Appetizers or not. The Badlands has wirange from $7.99 to $8.99; fi. There will be a special salads $9.99-$12.99; steaks Lent menu. $13.99 (six oz. sirloin) to $29.99 (20 oz. ribeye); seafood $13.99 (two shrimp entrees) to $18.99 (two salmon dishes, one white manager, says they usually and when you ask them to fish plate, walleye and blackened tilapia). Pasta dishes range from $11.99 to $13.99. There's even a menu page for comfort foods, with things like meat loaf, pot roast and pork chops. Oh, and there's a kid's menu for $4.99.

work right away. So he interned at a local Perkins Restaurant, where he washed dishes, waited on tables and whatever else his mentor Harvey asked of him. Abe says contrary to what the media might have you think, Iranians (they call themselves A warm Persians, which applies to many people in the region fireplace who live outside the political provides borders of Iran) are naturally among the friendliest and most hospitable people on enjoyable the planet. Hospitality is a deeply ingrained part of their cultural mind set. Abe reminded me that the Mall of America was built by four John Bechtel/ Special to MDN Iranian brothers who started with a family rug business. Four years into his life here in the States, Abe bought his first restaurant, ironically named Uncle Sam's Restaurant. He and friends remodeled and repainted it and opened for business in north Fargo. During the next two years, he and friends opened two more restaurants, but things got out of hand, and he parted company and relocated to Grand Forks, where he opened a Ground Round casual dining restaurant. He had restaurant ownership in his blood, but he was not yet a successful restaurateur.

State

Moorhead

University, and being a foreign student, was expected to

Good to the last drop

Dear Heloise: When the salad-dressing bottle appears empty, there is still a salad's worth of dressing in there. I add a couple of teaspoons of vinegar to the bottle, put the cap on and shake. I have more than enough dressing to finish my salad. — Emma D. in Oregon

Emma, I do this, too! This is an easy way to use the last of the salad dressing. Vinegar once again comes to the rescue! There are so many other uses and hints with vinegar that I wrote my Heloise's Fantabulous Vinegar Hints and More pamphlet, which you can order by sending $5 and a long, self-addressed, stamped (70 cents) envelope to: Heloise/Vinegar, P.O. Box 795001, San Antonio, TX 78279-5001. My hint: I add some spices, such as chives and garlic powder, along with the vinegar to the dressing bottle. I call it "Surprise Salad Dressing." Be sure to label the bottle, or someone else will get a surprise when he or she pours it on a salad! — Heloise

Bottle band

Dear Heloise: To prevent oil from running down the outside of the bottle when turning it upright after pouring, I take a tissue and fold it in half twice the long way. I wrap this around the neck of the bottle and secure with a short, fat rubber band. No greasy bottle slipping out of your hands and making a mess. — Carole in Nebraska

Good hint, Carole, a good hint indeed. One could use a paper towel or heavy paper napkin rather than a tissue. They are thicker and

If you like wine with your meal, the best bargain Badlands, on the menu is every bottle appeared busy and focused is half price on Monday on their tasks. nights, and the selection of a separate room for private Fish Camp and Grill, a fran- of them do so because of a There are at least four parties with a seating capac- chise operation out of favorable experience they don't place employment perform a task, they ask want ads in the paper to get why? His generation just got help. They recruit from it done. The "why" referrals from other employ- about keeping your job. ees with a good track record, and they sometimes hire Abe Sakak, walk-ins. Shoe-leather initiative can say a lot about a restaurateur person. On those occasions when I have been a guest at everyone we know as Badlands was a "renews" (restaurant-ese for A few other details you different restaurant with the "comes back"), studies have a new name, was

Staffing

reviews, the unique to the hospitality business management classes

Allen is married, a father industry. For example, you management. restaurants) is really all about.

A restaurateur is more ager/owner of multiple enter-Allen, who is 40 years prises and skilled application old, says the two differences of systems technology in their he notices with the newer operations. This can be a crugeneration of employees are cial distinction. It is not that a that for most of them cell more intuitive and independphones are a major distrac- ent management style cannot Allen, the restaurant tion that didn't exist before; succeed, but that a systems approach is less likely to fail.

Take Abe Sakak, the owner of Badlands, for example. Abe left Tehran, the capital city of Iran, in 1975, when he was 15 years old. The monarchy of Shah Reza Pahlavi was starting to unravel, Abe's father had just died, so his mother and older Occasionally in doing brothers sent him to live in these restaurant and food Fergus Falls, Minn. Abe wasnarrative n't to see his mother again for requires the use of terms another 20 years. He took

The guest experience

A local restaurant owner can develop a limited view of the world professionally because of his isolation. Abe eventually partnered with another Minot guy, Myron Thompson, and together they built a chain of Applebee's franchises, until they had 24 of them in North Dakota, Minnesota and California. Abe says the "guest experience" is a feeling, an emotional connection between the host and the guest. It is respect, warmth, the prospect of friendship and gratitude that you stopped by to visit. In the hospitality industry, you might almost say the concept of "guest" borders on a religious experience. As Abe was talking, I was recalling a recent experience in a Minot restaurant/sports bar where our waiter was so engrossed in the sports event on the TV screens that he half turned his back to us so he did not miss anything on the program, and we had to repeat our order several times because he wasn't paying attention. A guest we were not. Friends we were not. For our server we were clearly a nuisance and an intrusion.

See GRILL — Page C3

Grill

Continued from Page C

I also thought about those occasions when someone complained about cold or uncooked food, or took some unsatisfactory product back to a customer service counter, only to be received as if they were either a liar or a thief, or having a server challenge them with, if you didn't like the food, why did you eat so much of it? Many years ago I ate a meal in a Pennsylvania Holiday Inn and my meal required an obligatory side of red beets, and to make matters worse, the red beets were so old and rubbery that it was very difficult to get a fork into them. I didn't eat the red beets, but everything around them. I complained about it when it was time to pay. The cashier challenged me if they were so bad, why did I wait so long to complain? Why didn't I tell my server? My answer was that I wasn't looking for a free meal or compensation, but I thought they would want to know about their rubber red beets. After the cashier's sarcasm, however, I went back into the dining room while they were still clearing our table. I found my red beets, grabbed a fork and headed back to the cashier, suggesting she try to get a fork into one of them. She gamely tried and the red beet flew off the side of the plate it gets discounted with each day area. More demand for restaurants, and landed on the floor. Then I did get a full refund, for all four of us at the table. Again, was this a guest experience? Not hardly. We've all been there.

Somewhere along the line, Abe Sakak became a true restaurateur. He became a pro. I asked him with so many restaurant locations (12 in North Dakota alone!) how could he manage consistency, quality and things like brand recognition? Which means, how do you maintain your distinction between you all your competitors? and Particularly in a place like Minot, which is pretty far from everywhere and there are only two restaurant food distributors in town, and almost all of the restaurants are buying their raw materials (meats, baked goods, produce) from the same people?

Supply chain management

With a menu ranging from salads and hamburgers to seafood and steak, the Badlands Grill has something to please almost any guest. Cook Mitchell Conrad cooks up steaks.

is almost impossible to find fresh your lettuce has to travel from farm probably be a while before oysters (never frozen) seafood here in to distributor, store or restaurant. on the half shell will be readily Minot? Actually you can get it, but That's over 24 hours of non-stop available here in Minot. Geography probably not at a price you are will- driving. And none of us want wilt- has a big influence on what we eat, ing to pay. It is all about the cost of ed lettuce. Many other perishables anywhere in the world. getting it here, and distance is come into Minot from Lincoln, money. Local grocers have proba- Neb., about 800 miles away. Many Franchising a bly experimented with flying fresh large chains and franchises develop fish in periodically, but it is risky their own proprietary supply business, because flying it in fresh chains to control cost and quality. can easily add $7 to $9 to a plate of food in a restaurant, and if it does- boom made things better, because n't sell quickly in the grocery store, of all the people moving into the that passes. Business people like to more variety, greater choices and stay in business, and profit is the with increased demand, maybe cost of doing business tomorrow. even some food prices will go Right here in Minot we continually down. Well, not so fast. Yes, there see restaurants go extinct, and it is is more demand, which puts more usually for the same reason: Their pressure on the distributors, who costs exceeded their revenue, and bring the raw products (meats and that is not sustainable. Now if Microsoft or Cisco or some other Silicon Valley giant decided to relo- ers and maybe even higher wages cate to Minot and brought with for the drivers. Yes, they can invest them 500 southern California capital, either their own or the employees and their families, all of whom are addicted to their diets of what happens if/when demand falfresh seafood, we might see a suc- ters, such as when the price of oil cessful seafood restaurant here, drops dramatically on world marserving fish at dinner tonight that was caught this morning.

The demand might be sufficient ment? to make it economical to ship it here in quantity and daily. We, as the restaurant guests, exert a huge items, they have to guesstimate the influence on what they offer. They demand, and then sit down with are going to sell what we are willing their supply chain providers and to buy.

lettuce used in North Dakota comes south of Canada, before they know

Now you might think the oil produce) into town. But that means they need more trucks, more drivbanks to purchase more trucks, but kets and they end up with too much, and now, unneeded equip-

So when restaurant owners perceive an interest in new menu discuss the logistics of getting the Abe explained that much of the raw materials into town, an hour

Have you ever wondered why it from Yuma, AZ. That's 1,700 miles if it is feasible. As you can see, it will restaurant vs. an independent

John Bechtel/Special to MDN

Abe says you have to work twice as hard as an independent. He says franchisees meet regularly from many different parts of the country and world and compare experiences, which is extremely valuable. They get more global input as to what their industry is doing, and there is terrific cross-pollination of ideas. This is where their creativity comes in. As a franchise, no one operator can implement new ideas until the chain implements changes for the entire brand and helps everyone in the system to grow. Imagine what would happen, for example, if every McDonald's had a different idea what color the famous arches should be?

I asked Abe how you can control quality in 30 restaurants from a home office and small staff in Minot? He emphasized five things: Get the right people on the bus. Selecting your key personnel is like getting married. If you get a good one, there's nothing like it. If you get a bad one, there's nothing like that either. Secondly, your talent has to fly your flag; they have to adhere relentlessly to your belief system. Third, if you want loyalty from your staff, you have to make emotional deposits if you want to make withdrawals. Fourth, everything gets measured. With today's technology, Abe said, tongue in cheek, he can know, per guest, per month, how many times they flush the toilet in the restrooms. Or how many extra French fries were used last week, per order, above the norm? I asked him if he ever felt overwhelmed with too much information? Or did his employees feel that way? Abe asked me How do you feed an elephant? One bite at a time. Take one goal at a time and keep a scorecard. The fifth essential is maintaining accountability for results at all times.

When Abe invested in the first incarnation of Badlands, Up the Creek Fish Camp and Grill, the franchisor, who had seven or eight stores, folded. Other things changed, too. He and his long-term partner Myron Thompson, decided to go in separate directions. Abe took all the non-Applebee stores, including some Village Inns (mostly breakfasts and pies). Abe began investing in Sonics stores, including the one here in Minot and another in Fargo. Because of the climate, he designed his stores to include a dining room.

As an independent restaurant, Abe, Allen and others have to work harder to find new and better ways to improve the guest experience. There is an unspoken synergy among them; Abe needs them to buy in totally to the vision, and they need his guidance in getting there one step at a time. Abe quoted Stephen Covey: "To achieve goals you've never achieved before, start doing things you've never done before." Then Abe gave me a homework assignment. Go to YouTube and enter "Covey 4 Disciplines of Execution." I did my homework. I laughed myself silly, and I learned. Now I pass that homework assignment on to you.

As my guest, and the guest of The Minot Daily News, please feel free to comment on these articles. Your feedback helps me better serve you. Besides informing you about places to eat or visit that you may or may not already frequent, I try to help us get better acquainted with our neighbors and service providers, and provide little tidbits of new information and fun facts. Any hole-in-the-wall fun places to try out please let me know about them. Minot first, then anywhere in North Dakota and just across the border in neighboring states. I answer all emails. My email

f bankfirstwestern.com

Your locally owned, hometown Bank has joined the neighborhood!

We are thrilled to now better serve North Minot.

North Hill Location 2105 16th St. NW • (701) 852-8200

Join us for our Grand Opening Celebration! February 11, 12 & 13

Stop in to see our beautiful new space and learn about the full service banking experience we offer.

There will be registration for ten $100 Visa Gift Cards that we will be giving away daily! Additionally, a Grand Prize Winner will be selected for a special prize each day of the Grand Opening!*

You can bank on us

*Registration for all prizes will be 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Feb. 11, 12 & 13. Other rules and restrictions may apply.